Q. 4. Answer the following questions. (10)

A) In a case, the state of Andhra Pradesh nationalised the motor transport industry under a government scheme. Before nationalising the said industry, the government invited objections from affected and interested parties. The petitioner filed his objections and said objections were heard by the secretary of government. In spite of filing objections, the scheme of nationalising the motor industry was passed by the government. The petitioner filed a case challenging the approval of the scheme, contending two issues: 1) The secretary who heard the objection was the same person who initiated the scheme. 2) The objections were heard by one officer, and the decision was taken by another officer.

In light of the above case, explain which principle is violated here, write in detail about the principle, and give the name of the above landmark judgement.
